Renovations to ASH will be celebrated Sept. 15

ASH and Allwine open house set for Sept. 15

Kristin Zagurski

Invited alumni and retired faculty, as well as current UNO students, faculty and members of the public are welcome to attend the Arts and Sciences Hall/Allwine Hall Open House, which will be held Sept. 15 from 9 a.m. to 3 p.m.

In celebration of the extensive renovations that have taken nearly four years to complete, all departments and offices in the two buildings will be open for visitors to tour.

Dave Wanzenried, assistant dean for the college of arts and sciences, said there is going to be "lots" happening during the open house.

In addition to the Arts & Sciences and Allwine Halls, Durham Science Center and the plaza between Roskens Hall and ASH will hold festivities.

"I'm really looking forward to it," Wanzenried said.

Some of the events of the day include:

- The physics and chemistry departments giving demonstrations using the Kapow Van in the plaza between ASH and RH.

- Readings of literary works and a film festival sponsored by the English department.

- A display of student projects and a video on women's rights by the women's studies department.

- The foreign language department will feature tables of translators for visitors to speak with.

- The geology and geography departments will be giving remote sensing demonstrations.

- The communication department will have a display.

Wanzenried also complimented the artwork that was added to the buildings during renovation.

He said that there is a requirement that 1 percent of the total cost of remodeling be spent on art.

"Over 50 regional artists competed to have their works hung in the remodeled buildings," Wanzenried said.

Fourteen works were chosen to be featured. Wanzenried mentioned work by Gary Day and a painting of the Arts & Sciences Hall by Judy Welk as highlights of the artwork.

A brochure on the new art in the buildings will be available at the open house.

Wanzenried said after seeing changes take place in these buildings a floor at a time has been really remarkable. "I think people will really say 'wow.'"

University of Nebraska schools hope for climb in rankings

Kristin Zagurski

In their first meeting of the 2001-2002 academic year, the NU Board of Regents plans to begin work on a quality-control plan.

The goal of the plan is to elevate each NU campus into one of the top 30 ranking spots in its respective category in the annual U.S. News and World Report's "America's Best Colleges" rankings.

For UNO, this means falling in the "Regional University - Midwest" top 30. Last year, UNO was placed in the third tier among its peers. This means UNO must dramatically improve its ranking scores to climb higher in the ranks.

But how does USN&WR determine who makes rank and who does not?

According to USN&WR's Web site, their ranking method uses 16 measures of academic excellence.

Text on their Web site reveals that their ranking system rests on two pillars:

"First, it relies on quantitative measures that education experts have proposed as reliable indicators of academic quality. Second, the rankings are based on nonpartisan views of what matters in education."

Schools are first categorized by mission and region before data is collected and a score is given.

UNO was grouped among 504 other regional universities, and further categorized as one of 261 public regional universities. According to the USN&WR Web site, a regional university is one that offers a full range of undergraduate programs, some masters degrees, and few, if any, doctoral programs.

UNO was then further categorized

Mavs take on Lopers in I-80 high noon showdown

David M. Johnson

The UNO Mavericks hit the road Saturday for a showdown of offensive powerhouse teams. UNO tackles Nebraska-Kearney at Foster Field in front of what is expected to be an overflow crowd.

Head coach Darrell Morris (8-3 in 2000) is in his second season at the helm of the Loper ship. His team was unbeaten (5-0) at home. UNK demolished an out-gunned Wayne State 43-9 on Aug. 30.

Senior Mike Muma has the quarterback duties for the Kearney squad. His passing performance in Week 1 (21 completions, zero interceptions, 263 yards, 2 TDs) earned him a 160.3 passing efficiency rating and the respect of all Division II defensive coordinators.

Muma spread the ball around against Wayne State to nine different receivers. Senior Jace Pittman (5 receptions for 39 yards) and redshirt freshman Allen Burrell (3 receptions for 37 yards, TD) were the top go-to guys.

UNK's ground game was not as impressive. Senior Eric Jorgensen rushed for just 26 yards on 10 carries. Muma carried eight times for 34 yards.

Defensively, junior Brian Wachtel was the main force. Wachtel recorded nine tackles, including two sacks for minus-14 yards.

The Lopers continue to rely on European toes to handle the kicking duties. Dane H. Juul-Nielsen was almost perfect against Wayne State, hitting two of three field goal attempts and nailing all five of his point after attempts.

UNO holds the overall series lead between the I-80 schools, 21-7. The Mavs have taken the last six battles, and 15 of the past 18.

Head Coach Pat Behrns' team won last year's game 30-13 at Caniglia Field.

Two years ago, UNO traveled to Kearney for an evening affair. A tornado skirted the edge of city prior to kickoff, and the game was played in a torrential downpour. The Mavs won that battle 29-26 when the Loper place kicker slipped in the mud while attempting a game-tying field goal.

Saturday's forecast calls for partly cloudy skies, a chance of showers in the morning and a high of 77 degrees — perfect football weather.

College anti-alcohol effort a tough sell

Sharif Durhams
Milwaukee Journal Sentinel

Administrators at the University of Wisconsin-Madison can tell you the stories: Parents asking where their children can get fake identifications. Parents sneaking cases of vodka into dorm rooms, since their kids might have a hard time getting the booze on their own.

Just last week, some parents were caught drinking alcohol in a UW-Madison residence hall.

So while an American Medical Association survey released August 29 indicates that parents are highly concerned about binge drinking and want universities and towns to crack down on the practice, there is still a small group of parents and students who do not see a problem and for whom it may be getting worse.

"I suspect things like that are happening everywhere in the country," UW-Madison Chancellor

John D. Wiley said of the incidents on his campus. "People should realize there are a variety of behaviors."

Nationally, the public seems more aware that binge drinking causes problems, and they're more willing to see universities and local governments take action to curb it, the study says.

For instance, 95 percent of parents surveyed nationally said excessive drinking was a serious threat to their children, and 85 percent said easy access to alcohol near colleges contributed to the problem.

Almost all of the respondents - 93 percent - believe that bars that don't train workers to identify drunk or underage patrons should be stripped of their liquor licenses, and 78 percent believe that college towns should be able to regulate alcohol sales to slow or stop binge drinking.

The nationwide telephone survey of 801 adults age 21 and older was conducted in July and August by Penn, Schoen and Berland Associates in Washington, D.C., for the AMA's Office of Alcohol and Other Drug Abuse. The margin of error is plus or minus 3.5 percentage points.

The AMA and 10 schools working to curb binge drinking are putting out their poll results now to create a buzz at the beginning of the school year, a time when thousands of college freshmen are exposed to campus drinking culture for the first time.

Some students don't see a big problem, though. Marquette University freshman Jon Schultz, 18, said from what he had seen since classes started, most students limit their drinking to weekends. He and his friend Joe Tassone, 18, usually have beer and a shot or two at a house party, Schultz said.

"They should just hope that their kids are smart and know when to do their schoolwork," he said. ☺

Girl power: The "not so big" lie

David M. Johnson

That's Life magazine recently released a survey conducted of 5,000 women in which it was claimed 94 percent of women tell lies on a daily basis and did not feel remorse over doing so.

"A lie a day helps women work, rest and play," writes the author of the study.

We decided to see if the female population at UNO felt the same.

"Oh sure," says one female freshman, "I probably tell a lie every day, but it is nothing big. I don't feel bad about it, and it doesn't matter if I tell the lie to a man or woman."

Another freshman jumped on the bandwagon.

"It's definitely true," she says. "I usually lie if I'm late for class and I meet somebody I really don't want to talk to. I'll lie about being sick or something to get away, and no, I don't feel bad about it. And, it's much easier to lie to a man."

One graduate student was shocked when approached about the survey.

"That's not me," she says. "I'd feel too bad to lie."

One junior told me she lied often, but not about "big stuff."

"I lie about my weight," she confesses. "And I lie to women more than men. About feeling bad — it depends on what the lie is about. I feel bad about a lot of stuff."

As luck would have it, I ran into a pair of European exchange students who were more than willing to tell me all about life.

"Sure I lie," one says. "A woman's life is more complicated than a man's. We have to lie. And why feel bad about that?"

Her friend entered the conversation.

"We lie for society's sake. It's like flirting. Flirting is really lying because we really don't want the man. We're just trying to make him feel better. Women are much more clever. We know all the tricks."

I thanked them, then quickly left while my manhood was still intact. ☺

Southwestern artist featured first time at Joslyn Art Museum

Zahra Cheema

For most painters, using brushes is their primary tool, but for Santa Fe-based artist Emmi Whitehorse, her main tool is her hands.

Using an array of utensils for her paintings, such as chalk, oil pastels, her hands and sometimes her feet, Whitehorse creates her one-of-a-kind works.

Starting Sept. 8, and running through Oct. 14, people can see her unique works at the Joslyn Art Museum as a part of the 20/21 series of exhibitions. The series examines the work of emerging or mid-career artists at the turn of the century. Whitehorse's exhibition will feature works from the beginning of her 30-year career to her latest works, many completed just weeks ago.

"It will be nice to see where she's been and where she's going," says Amy Rummel, media relations coordinator at the Joslyn Art Museum. The Joslyn is the first museum in the Midlands to present Whitehorse's work as a career retrospective.

The paintings will not only be taken from Whitehorse's private collection; some pieces will be loaned from private collectors.

Though Whitehorse's work is sometimes categorized as Native American art because of her Navajo heritage, Rummel says Whitehorse sees her art as universally understood.

"She prefers to be identified as a contemporary artist," she says.

Rummel said there are markings in Whitehorse's works that capture her personal connection to her heritage that may not be evident to the common spectator.

Whitehorse's works have appeared internationally as well as nationally. Her paintings hang in the American Embassies in Rabat, Morocco, and into the Midwest region, thus its designation as a Regional University - Midwest.

All schools are judged on seven areas for academic quality: academic reputation, retention and graduation of students, faculty resources, student selectivity, financial resources, alumni giving and graduation rate performance.

On a scale of five points, UNO scored a 3.2 for academic reputation. This number was higher than both UNL's 3.1 (on a national scale) and UNK's 2.9.

UNO fell to both UNL and UNK, however, in terms of freshman retention rate and average graduation rate.

All three University of Nebraska campuses were listed in the third tier of their respective divisions, behind the "top schools" and "second tier" categories, but ahead of the "fourth tier."

The goal of getting NU campus ratings into the top 30 was adopted two years ago as part of a long-range strategic plan.

Board of Regents Ward 2 Representative Nancy O'Brien thinks the measure of quality of the NU system universities should not rest solely on USN&WR's rankings and other national evaluations.

O'Brien said she believes the true way to measure quality is through a combination of all the sources -- national, student, faculty and peer evaluations.

"The priorities have been set," O'Brien said. "Now we need a process to get them in place."

USN&WR rankings for this year are due out this week. ☺

Beacom: Meet will bring traffic to Elmwood Park

On Sept. 18, the Creighton Prep Invite Cross Country meet will be held in Elmwood Park. Spectator vehicles, team buses and runners will crowd the sidewalks, parking lots and streets of Elmwood Park, warns Creighton Prep Athletic Trainer Mike Beacom.

Beacom recommends that UNO students and staff members avoid driving through Elmwood Park after 3 p.m. on the Sept. as races will be held at 4, 4:30, 5 and 5:30 p.m.

Board vote could change name

At Friday's Board of Regents meeting, a vote will be made to change the name of the UNO Department of Dramatic Arts to the UNO Department of Theatre.

This change has been recommended for approval by the College of Fine Arts, Deans Forum, Educational Policy Advisory Committee and Executive Committee of Faculty Senate.

In relation to that proposed change, President L. Dennis Smith has approved the name change of the department's undergraduate degree program from Bachelor of Arts in Dramatic Arts to Bachelor of Arts in Theatre.

Flags lowered to honor Lambert

Flags were lowered to half-staff on Wednesday, Sept. 5 to honor the memory of former UNO professor W.C.B. "Breck" Lambert.

Lambert, a former professor of political science who retired from the university in 1984, died Aug. 29 at the age of 83.

Fraternity runs to increase the fat

Angie Schaffer

One would think that the apparent contradiction in sponsoring a running event aimed at helping people get fatter would cause any fraternity to pause a moment and reconsider. If they continue to pull such illogical stunts, who on campus could take them seriously?

Don't tell that to Lambda Chi Alpha. At least not until Saturday, when they will have completed their exhaustive deed and need only sit back and bask in their glory.

After all, because of them, people in Omaha are, or will be, eating. And even if these people would have been eating without Lambda Chi Alpha, they can now eat more, and better, because of a handful of runners' tired steps.

And what must these men do to aid the hungry in Omaha? Nothing big -- just spend three days running to Kearney.

Was that a marathon runner in the background, gasping in horror?

Well, rest your fears, my friend. This event allows for tag-teaming, or this innocent-sounding fund-raiser would take more lives than it would save.

They have done this in the past, so Lambda Chi Alpha stands confident of their success. When asked how Matt Lindmier, who started the race at 8 a.m. Thursday, would last the 1.5 to 2 hours he estimated he would run for, he admitted that "it will probably be a light jog for me."

It is likely advantageous that he has been running for recreation as well, because the possibilities of a novice running for two hours straight seems questionable. Once again, the invention of "the tag" has given these men an easy way out — metaphorically, of course. Nearly 180 miles divided by 35 people in three days — still a bit daunting. But, as mentioned above, since Lambda Chi Alpha has done this twice before (in 1997 and 1999), one might consider them seasoned experts. According to Lambda Chi Alpha's President Nick Brown, the runners will include 33 fraternity members, two alumni, and the biological brother of a fraternity member.

Lambda Chi Alpha International Fraternity has raised over 5.1 million pounds of food in the past five years during the annual North American Food Drive, which is held in October. Last year, UNO's chapter raised over 40,000 pounds of food with the help of local businesses. In addition to this year's Kearney run, the fraternity has gathered student donations using an eye-catching brass pig, strategically placed in the first-floor hallway of our very own Milo Bail Student Center. The concept is simple: the more money inside the pig, the heavier it gets.

On a more traditional note, the fraternity will bring the game ball to the Kearney field just in time for the UNO-UNK football game at 11 a.m. Saturday. The runners will be taking less congested highways to Kearney to avoid heavy interstate traffic (not only are Kearney and UNO playing this weekend, UNL had to step in and play Notre Dame).

Here's to you, men, for supporting such a noble cause. As Lindmier so summarily put it, "it's work, but I enjoy doing it because it benefits so many people."

Too bad we are unable to hear what he is thinking an hour after the starting line.

The women of Sirt, a Turkish village near Antalya, have banded together in an attempt to have running water piped into their homes. What they have done is cut their husbands off from all sexual favors. The men of Sirt are pleading with the local governor. They say they will donate the labor if the government can come up with pipes and supplies. "Please help us, please understand our situation," one of the Sirt husbands told local governor Mehmet Carpraz.

Now, if we can get the wives together of the men who are "working" on the 72nd and Dodge road project ...

• This Beer Tastes Like Shit

Historians on the Orkney Islands off northern Scotland have discovered what they believe is a 5,000-year-old brewery. The team, headed by Merryn Kineley, found evidence of a malt grain kiln and traces of fermented alcohol based on grain. The concoction is brewed in clay pots with small bits of baked ... animal dung.

This crud's for you.

The late French leader Francois Mitterand said she had "the eyes of Caligula and the mouth of Marilyn Monroe." Now, the Blue Gallery in Clerkenwell, England, has commissioned Yeah, I was fooled too.

A team of New York scientists say their studies show that standing on a vibrating platform for 20 minutes a day may be as good for your bones as jogging or playing sports. The team set a sheep on a vibrating platform for a year and found a significant increase in bone density. They believe their discovery may lead to new treatments to heal broken bones.

Which I received falling off the vibrating platform.

• Hay There, Slow Down!

The inhabitants of Orsett, England, are sick and tired of people speeding through their village at 80 miles per hour. So, they got together and dressed up a scarecrow to look like a traffic cop. The straw dummy sports a fluorescent jacket, black pants, coppers hat and is positioned holding what looks like a radar gun aimed at oncoming traffic. So far, the scarecrow has been effective and people are slowing down to the 30 miles per hour speed limit.

• Where Else But Texas?

Employees at Randolph Air Force Base in San Antonio, Texas, got a big surprise when they turned on the water taps early last month — oil came out. Somehow, the "black gold" found its way into the base's water supply Aug. 3, contaminating the entire lot. The Air Force shut the base down and gave the 2,700 housing residents bottled water until the mess could be cleaned up and purified. "The bad news is there's not enough oil here to pay our salaries," said Chief of Public Affairs Ralph Monson.

Maybe not, but perhaps there's enough to pay for a couple of those $900 toilet seats the Pentagon keeps ordering.

If you've ever been lost, you need to read this story: Somebody has stolen the signpost of the town of Lost, Scotland. The town folks there want Lost to be found, and in a hurry. "Lost is a tiny village, and it's quite difficult to find at the best of times," said Beverly Tricker, spokeswoman for the Aberdeenshire tourist board.

If they really want to know what lost is all about, maybe somebody can cut out the headlines of the latest Minnesota Twins game and staple it to a board for those folks. ☺

Sex in the classroom?

Dr. Luv fills your prescription ... and much more

I know you see the title of this article and expect that raunchy, sweaty, spunky type of story line of how you can get it on in your class without being caught.

Well that article is for next week, pending proper approval from my editors.

Instead of that boring topic, I will offer some words of advice before I answer some fan mail.

Courage is the topic of today. Courage will make you the man you want to be. Courage gives you the knowledge to know that women aren't as smart as men and you can win her over with your intelligence rather than your charm. I mean, look at some of the guys who score the hottest chicks; these guys are butt-ugly or rich. So if those guys can score, why can't you?

It takes a winner's mentality to win in a situation like that and that is where courage comes in. You have to think like a winner. You think Rocky didn't think like a winner when he beat Apollo? You think the world thumb wrestling champ, Jabaan Winfrey, didn't think like a winner when he beat out 50 people to win? It takes a champ's heart to knowingly put yourself in the line of fire of rejection and come out without a scratch. It's already hard when a chick doesn't tell you if she is interested or looks at you in a manner of interest. So be the leader of the situation and step up or shut up.

Dear DL,

I have a situation where I've been dating this chick for three months now and the relationship is going well, but I think she is cheating on me. How do I find out without offending her or looking like a fool? Help please!
Being Played

Dear BP,

I can't claim this technique as my own, but this maneuver I'm about to disclose will work. The next time you go over to your girl's house, tell her you have to use the bathroom. While in the bathroom, clean the toilet stool. Don't kind of wipe it down, clean it totally and don't leave any dirt. I know right now you're thinking that you'll be looking like a housewife or something, but in reality you're setting a trap. After it's clean, wait a week or two and check the toilet. If you know a man's aim like I do, then you will have proof if someone else has been there. This test is predictable and foolproof, so try it and let me know how it works out. (Test courtesy of Manuel Escobar)

Dear DL,

I have a problem with my love tool. I tried Viagra from a friend of mine and it worked well --- so well that I went 12 straight hours with wood. Well, the negative of the situation is now I can't get it back up. I want to know is this problem temporary or permanent? Please help!

Dressing for suck-sess How pointless theme days can distract you from cubicle misery

Mike Machian

Working the past five years as a telemarketer at a mail-order novelty company, I know the meaning of repetitive. Nothing is more repetitive than working in customer service for a company that sells novelty items by mail order. That repetitiveness can cause employees to lose the will to live — or worse, bring down productivity.

Every now and then, in an attempt to break up the monotony, my company will try various themed days, like Husker Day during game day. That's original. If they want to break up monotony, they should have a day where you are not allowed to wear Husker items. Another worthy effort was to encourage employees to come dressed as your favorite character from a movie. Unfortunately, this backfired because they didn't count on so many of their employees to be fans of the movie Boogie Nights.

Since it is a good possibility that most of us, at some point, will end up as pointless middle managers who are assigned the ominous task of lowering the suicide rate among their employees, I've decided to fill some space, I mean, give some advice on making wage slavery fun. What follows are some "non-traditional" theme day do's and don'ts that you can try at home or work. I am even going to suggest these at my work, and only time will tell if they use them or if I even get to keep my job.

Wouldn't it be neat if they had a ...

Come To Work Drunk Day

Creating teamwork among your employees is something that many companies struggle to accomplish. That time and money is better spent down at the corner liquor store. Anyone who has been to a bar knows that alcohol will have complete strangers acting like best friends within an hour. Just appoint Captain Morgan as leader of your team and he will take care of the rest. Sure, there will be the occasional brawl, but you can use them as an opportunity to weed out potential troublemakers.

Take Your Kids To Work For You Day

Everyone has, at one point, done the whole take your son/daughter to work day. Your offspring got out of going to school while you still had to work. That hardly seems fair, right? It's a good bet that you've brought your kids to work enough times that they probably know how to do your job. Now they can truly earn their allowance while you take the day off. Little Timmy has to learn how to run a forklift someday, right?

Clothing Optional Day

If you work at a slightly formal business atmosphere, then you've probably come across the craziness known as Casual Friday. Studies have shown that the occasional Casual Friday can create a slightly more relaxed work environment and improve productivity. Why not go the whole nine yards? If wearing casual (as opposed to formal) slacks and a Dilbert shirt on Fridays makes you slightly more relaxed, then coming into work bare-ass naked ought to make you totally at peace with the world. Nothing brings up productivity like inner peace.

Punk Rock Day

I don't know about you, but I'm sick as hell of disco day. Then there are some sad souls that dress every day like it's country day. We need a day that addresses the needs of white middle class kids who hate everything. Instead of dressing up for a day, you get a crack at dressing down. The rotting dirty clothes you get to wear are similar to those worn on grunge rock day, except your shirts would bear offensive slogans and you get to wear more leather. Not only do you look punk rock on this day but you must act punk rock as well. This means anytime someone dares to address you directly, you get to tell them to piss off and then you break something. Just make sure it's something that isn't needed (by you) later.

It may seem like a good idea at first but don't try ...

Bring Your Gun To Work Day

This is not a good idea for one obvious reason — not everyone is a firearm enthusiast. While it seems like everyone in America has a gun, there are those old-fashioned people who prefer to carry just a knife or pointy stick. Those people would feel left out and possibly slightly intimidated by their gun-wielding co-workers. It is not realistic to expect everyone to go to Wal-Mart and shell out $50 for a gun just to fit in one day a work. Guns require care; unlike a puppy dog, you can't just buy one and forget about it the next day. Remember, it's never a good idea to use a gun to get people to like you.

Bring Your Cock To Work Day

Although you may be very proud of your cock and wish to show it off to everyone at work, chickens belong on the farm, not in your cubicle. Chickens can get spooked really easily when taken out of their natural environment and may start pecking people. It wouldn't look good if someone lost an eye because you were careless with your cock.

Anally Probe Your Co-Workers Day

Not a good idea unless you work at a hospital or just got fired from one. This is something that takes years to learn to do correctly. One little slip up could have your co-workers walking funny for a week. Lawsuits begin this way. Besides, most doctors will tell you recreational anal probing does more harm than good, anyway.

Being the manager of burned out office workers can be tough on you and detrimental to productivity. By using a little creativity when coming up with theme days, you can make your workplace a slightly less oppressive place. So when your employees are sitting in their cubicles wishing they were dead, they can now do it wearing silly clothes, and who doesn't like that? Feel free to be creative and mix and match ideas. Just use common sense and don't do something dumb like come to work naked with a gun and your kid drunk. ☹

.08? Ha! Only if you're driving!

column by Mitch Leaders

Now that the law regarding the legal limit of alcohol has been changed from .10 to .08, drunks across the Omaha metro area are now vexed for ways to get to and from their favorite watering holes without fear of being pulled over.

Quite frankly, getting caught driving drunk has dire and costly consequences that stay with you a long time. Getting thrown in the clink is perhaps the least of your problems in such a situation. It's having to pay out the ass for insurance that comes back to haunt you month after month, until you've been paying it for a number of years that is at the discretion of the insurer.

However, drinking goes hand in hand with the need for transportation, yet the laws come down hard on those who decide to take their chances and get caught. That presents a problem for people such as myself, who like stiff drinks in a social environment.

Case in point: my brother turned 21 just two weeks ago, and you know what that means. We were going, laws or no laws, on a barcrawl. The idea of a caravan of drunken retards was simply too dangerous, though. We knew we could have up to 25 people going along, which made me nervous.

So when the answer presented itself, I was ecstatic.

While looking through the yellow pages for a chauffeur service, I came across a Laidlaw Bus ad. Of course. What better way to get around than a gigantic school bus? The very idea of being absolutely plastered on a school bus appealed to me greatly. It was something I never thought I'd be able to do.

Here's the scoop: Laidlaw charges $28 an hour for the use of a school bus, with a minimum of three hours and a $75 deposit. The deposit is subject to certain rules, however, if you want it back. NO body fluids (or solids) of any kind are to be on the bus when it's returned. Alcohol can't be consumed on the bus, either. Our driver let us smoke on the bus, though, which we thought was pretty cool.

The beauty of this plan is that it's similar to collecting for a keg. Someone makes the initial investment, then makes his money back based on contributions. The more people who come along, the less they have to pay, although you'll want to tip your driver well if he or she did a good job. Take a couple of towels and a trashcan along, because riding in a school bus can be a little bumpy, and you don't want to lose $75 because of some punk that can't hold his liquor.

When all was said and done, we had an absolutely outstanding time. To the average citizen, we must have been quite a sight: 16 drunkards hanging out the windows, yelling at the top of our lungs, totally uninhibited. (I don't know if that was a good idea in retrospect; I'm almost positive you can be arrested for that.) Our driver was awesome, and while he didn't drink with us, he did come in and shake his ass at the Player's Club.

If you have a friend turning 21, more than likely you'll be going on a barcrawl as well. You won't want to have to limit yourself or your friend to one drink per hour. What kind of b.s. is that? Do the right thing and get him the best present money can buy on that special day: virtual immunity from the drinking laws. ☹

Golfers place just out of medals during Michigan trip

David M. Johnson

Head coach Melissa Odell took her UNO women's golf team to Michigan over the Labor Day weekend to participate in the 36-hole Ferris State Invitational at Big Rapids and the Laker Fall Invite in Grand Valley.

The Mavs finished fourth in the Ferris State meeting with a 685 team score.

Tanis Hastmann's 166 was the top UNO score, earning the freshman seventh-place individual honors.

Junior Katie Merchant posted a 174 for the Mavericks, followed closely by sophomores Stephanie Oster (175) and Katie Etter (176).

Sophomore Molly Yeager (180) and newcomer Mandy Houtz (183) also contributed for the Mavs.

UNO left Big Rapids to play in Grand Valley for a Monday/Tuesday affair. The Mavs shot a 660 for 36 holes, good for second place. Toledo won the 10-team Laker Fall event, charting a 617.

Merchant and Hastmann both shot a final-round 78 to pace the Mavs which, as a team, recorded a one-day school record 319.

Oster (80), Yeager (83), Etter (84) and Houtz (89) rounded out the scoring on Tuesday.

Soccer to host Quincy University Saturday

Paul Freeland

UNO soccer's first home hurdle awaits this Saturday when Quincy University (Ill.) pays a visit to UNO Field at Ak-Sar-Ben.

Maverick head coach Don Klosterman said the team's experiences during the weekend at the St. Cloud University (Minn.) tournament proved invaluable towards the team's early season development.

"I thought that the fact that we didn't win our first game was rather disappointing, but any coach would tell you that," Klosterman said. "The experience we gained, though, was invaluable. We saw that we were better than the other team, and the statistics bear that out, but we just couldn't come up with the win."

"Sunday, we didn't do a whole lot different, but the experience we gained from Saturday helped make us better. We had a game under our belts so we were more confident in our play and we were able to win. Up to that point, that was our biggest game of the season because you don't want to start out in an 0-2 hole in your section."

Quincy enters the 1 p.m. contest at 0-1 after losing their season opener to McKendree College 2-1. Their lone goal was scored by Omaha Mercy graduate and sophomore Emily Aguilar. The Hawks posted a 5-11-1 record last season, including a dismal 2-4 record away from home. This will be the first meeting between the Mavericks and the Hawks.

Klosterman said confidence is high in the Maverick camp, but the team is not automatically chalking up a UNO win.

"This group of players is something else," Klosterman said. "They were full of confidence even after the loss on Saturday. I'm not too worried about their confidence level because they know what the challenge is and they know they have to improve every game."

"Quincy has had a rough record the past couple of years, but to me that's not a real indicator of a team's performance. They were a very good team in the '90s and they made the NCAAs once or twice, so we're not taking anything for granted."

Cross country on the road again

Brian Brashaw

UNO women's cross country head coach Tim Hendricks carries a lot of momentum into his 15th season at the helm. Last year, the team never finished lower than fourth in any invitational meet and placed 10th at the Division II regionals.

The loss of Natalie Malone, however, is a big concern. Malone was the top finisher for the Mavs in every event for UNO last year.

Fortunately, a host of young, talented runners will compensate for the loss of Malone. The team this season will feature four juniors, one sophomore and two freshmen.

The juniors, including Michelle Ellingson, will be expected to take the top spots.

"Michelle will be in contention for one of the top spots on the squad," Hendricks said.

The team will get its first opportunity to compete this weekend via the annual UNO Invitational at Chalco Hills. This event has always been one of the strengths for the team.

UNO will run in three home meets, including the UNO Invite, the NCAA Pre-Regional, and the NCAA II Regionals on Nov. 3. They will also travel to four events, with hopes for an NCAA II national birth.

Roster: Juniors Michelle Ellingson, Darcy Preston, Bridget Stephenson, Sara Stricker. Sophomore De Anna Bailey, and Freshmen Julie Kearney, and Molly Miller.

Schedule:

UNO Invite	Sept. 8	10 a.m.
at UNL Invite	Sept. 15	10 a.m.
Pre-Regional	Sept. 22	11 a.m.
at Coyote Invite	Oct. 5	4 p.m.
at NCC Meet	Oct. 13	10 a.m.
at SDSU Open	Oct. 20	10 a.m.
NCAA II Regional	Nov. 3	11 a.m.
at NCAA II Meet	Nov. 17	10:30 a.m.

• Props to junior kicker Troy Severson, who was named Nebraska Division II Special Teams Player of the Week. Severson's 40-yard field goal sealed UNO's victory last week against NWMSU.

He also booted three PATs in the game.

• The Sept. 15 UNO-South Dakota State game will be televised on KYNE TV (Cox Channel 12). Kickoff is at 1 p.m.

• Northwest Missouri State quarterback John McMenamin played the second half of the Bearcats' 24-21 loss to UNO on Aug. 30 with a broken left arm. McMenamin completed 15-33 for 307 yards and 2 TDs in the game. He will be out three to six weeks.
